Quebec

Visiting Quebec City, dominated by majestic Chateau Frontenac, is like taking a trip into the past where the city's four hundred years of history can be seen everywhere.

New York

New York City has it all. In fact, there's almost too much to see. But wandering through its patchwork of neighbourhoods is as a great a thrill as any individual sight.

Halifax

Every city has a symbol that represents it more than anything else: for Halifax, that role is played by the star-shaped citadel that dates back to the late 18th century.

Boston

More than any other American city, Boston is a place where you can breathe some "European air": a city built for people, with a centre that can be easily visited on foot

Charlottetown

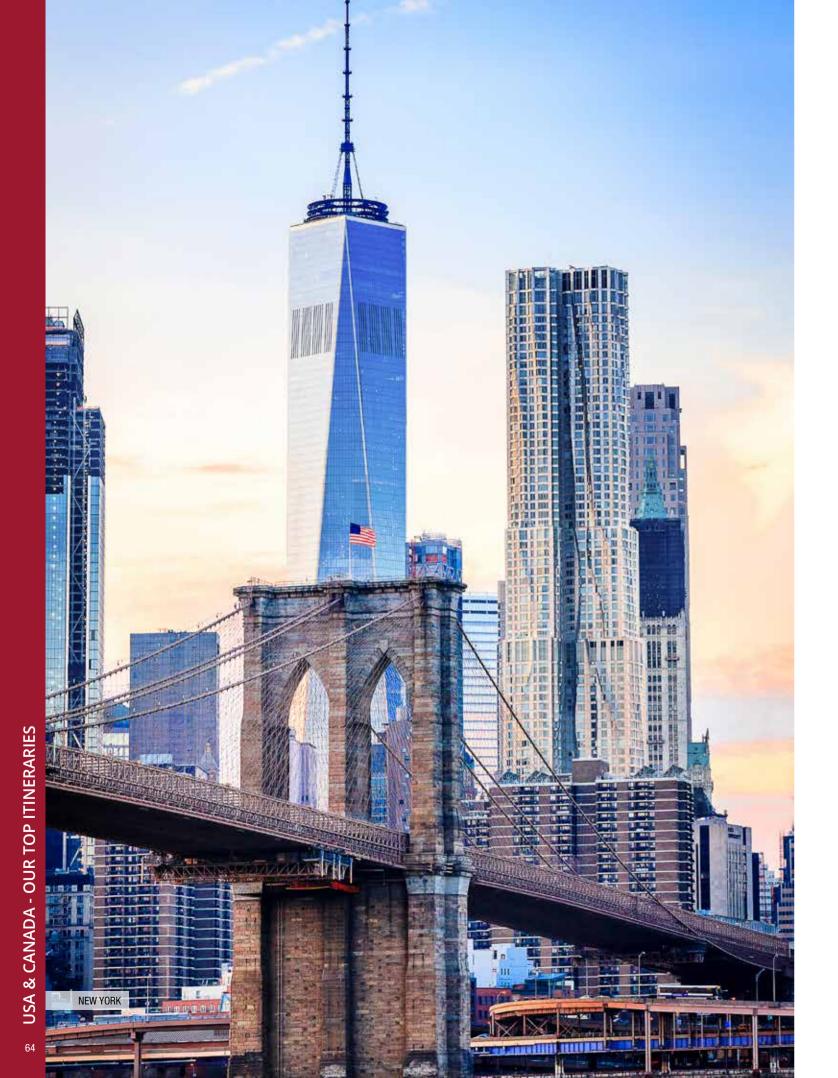

The Confederation Bridge that joins Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick is 12.9km long, making it the longest bridge in the world that passes over ice-covered waters.

Portland

Initially known as "Stumptown" or "The Clearing", Portland was very nearly named Boston, Oregon. The issue was decided by a coin flip between the two original settlers.
